

August 08, 2016

Related Practices

Grow
Start

Those Who Do it All... Shouldn't

Paul Jones, co-chair of Venture Best, the venture capital practice group at Michael Best, has been selected as a regular contributor of OnRamp Labs, a Milwaukee Journal Sentinel blog covering start-ups and other Wisconsin technology news. Paul's most recently contributed piece, "Those Who Do it All...Shouldn't" can be found under their Business Tab in the Business Blog section: Click here to view his latest blog.

A short excerpt can be found below:

"In more than thirty years in and around the high impact entrepreneur and investing space, I've come to the conclusion that every entrepreneur, even and in fact particularly the most successful, has at least one serious personality flaw.

One of the more common flaws is the "I can do it all" personality: the entrepreneur who insists that they are not only good at, but the best at everything involved with making their business a success.

What really makes the "I can do it all" entrepreneur so frustrating is not so much that they are almost always wrong about their capabilities. Rather it is that even if an entrepreneur really is the best at everything actually doing everything is still a bad idea."

Click here to read more.

Related People

Paul Jones

Of Counsel

pajones@michaelbest.com

T 608.283.0125